Episode three introduces viewers to Muhammad Yunus, known as the "banker to the poor," and one of the fathers of the concept of social entrepreneurship. With the simple but powerful realization that the poor need to be able to borrow money more than the rich do, Yunus founded Grameen Bank, which has today provided $3.8 billion in loans to 2.4 million families in Bangladesh and inspired similar credit operations in 100 countries. Leveraging the traditional craft of women in Rio de Janeiro, Maria Teresa "Tete" Leal founded a sewing cooperative called Coopa-Roca that produces high-quality, high-style clothes while maintaining fair labor practices for the women. Less glamorous as an occupation, but critically important, garbage collection is often a neglected service among the poor. In Peru, Albina Ruiz worried about the health impact of living in the filth of uncollected waste. Creating a micro-enterprise to do the job that the government was ignoring, Ruiz now has projects in 20 cities that provide garbage collection for over three million residents and employ 150 people. Creating businesses that break the cycle of poverty is the genius of social entrepreneurs.

With the U.S. government projecting a $426 billion deficit this year, critics are blaming some of the red ink on the Medicare prescription drug benefit, which President Bush signed into law in December 2003. In 2004, when NOW first reported on the story, the original cost of the bill had ballooned from $400 billion to $534 billion. Where does it stand today? NOW looks at what the Medicare law is costing America. A new wave of bombings across London this week has some asking new questions about those detained in the war on terror. NOW takes a look at the latest on the controversy surrounding the government's hard line on the detainees at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. Amnesty International has called the camp "the gulag of our times," and a growing number of critics - including some key conservatives -- say the detention of more than 500 terror suspects there may be doing America more harm than good. One of America's gleaming symbols of freedom and prosperity, Washington, DC is also home to one of the most impoverished and polluted neighborhoods in America. Two years ago, NOW traveled to this neighborhood along the banks of the Anacostia River to report on a non-profit group called the Earth Conservation Corps (ECC) that was transforming the lives of young people while teaching conservation. NOW returns for a poignant look at where those kids are today.

Over the past decade, India has emerged as the leader in the global market for white-collar "outsourcing" jobs - a notable component of India's rapid economic growth. This dramatic and personal film explores the experience of young Indian men and women who have been recruited into these new jobs requiring 80-hour work weeks and a westernized mindset. The film reveals the human and cultural impact of a sweeping global trend, exploring its effect on Indian family life, on the evolving landscape of Indian cities and towns, and on the aspirations and daily lives of young Indians, especially women, entering the work force.

The people of the Flathead Valley in Montana were stunned when a domestic terror cell's plot to kill local leaders was uncovered. Ex-cop Brenda Kitterman and environmentalist Mike Raiman wanted to do something to address the local tensions, but the community was torn. Many residents were losing their jobs in timber and mining, and blamed environmentalists. Native Americans, conservationists, teachers and civic leaders began receiving threats. Adding fuel to the fire was a radio talk show host who declared environmentalists "an enemy ... to be annihilated." Over a stormy two-year period, "The Fire Next Time" follows a deeply divided group of Montana citizens caught in a web of conflicts intensified by rapid growth and the power of talk radio.

How do you provide an education for children whom society doesn't value? Inderjit Khurana, an Indian schoolteacher who took the train to work, could not help noticing the slum children who spent their days begging from train passengers instead of attending school. Her solution was to bring a school to the train platforms, where she could earn the trust of the children and introduce them to an education. Dina Abdel Wahab had never given much thought to the special needs of disabled children in Egypt until her son Ali was born with Down Syndrome. Well-educated and affluent, she was able to access services for Ali, but she determined that her son, and all pre-school age children in Egypt, deserved a quality introduction to education. She is on her way towards that goal. In Thai villages, girls have become a commodity. Highly valued in the prostitution industry, they become a source of income instead of being a financial burden on their families. Sompop Janktraka, a loving and determined man, has started a school for young girls to give them an education and options for their future.

With the U.S. government projecting a $426 billion deficit this year, critics are blaming some of the red ink on the Medicare prescription drug benefit, which President Bush signed into law in December 2003. In 2004, when NOW first reported on the story, the original cost of the bill had ballooned from $400 billion to $534 billion. Where does it stand today? NOW looks at what the Medicare law is costing America. A new wave of bombings across London this week has some asking new questions about those detained in the war on terror. NOW takes a look at the latest on the controversy surrounding the government's hard line on the detainees at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. Amnesty International has called the camp "the gulag of our times," and a growing number of critics - including some key conservatives -- say the detention of more than 500 terror suspects there may be doing America more harm than good. One of America's gleaming symbols of freedom and prosperity, Washington, DC is also home to one of the most impoverished and polluted neighborhoods in America. Two years ago, NOW traveled to this neighborhood along the banks of the Anacostia River to report on a non-profit group called the Earth Conservation Corps (ECC) that was transforming the lives of young people while teaching conservation. NOW returns for a poignant look at where those kids are today.

April 2003 marks the 50th anniversary of one of science's great milestones - the discovery of the double-helix structure of DNA. This "cracking" of life's essential molecular "cookbook" was credited to three British scientists, James Watson, Francis Crick and Maurice Wilkins. But their breakthrough would have been impossible without the work of a brilliant molecular biologist and crystallographer named Rosalind Franklin. In 1962, when the three men were awarded a Nobel Prize for their discovery, Franklin's name wasn't even mentioned. Tragically, she had died of cancer four years earlier at age 37. The cancer was probably the result of radiation exposure she suffered while taking the x-ray photographs of the DNA that were directly responsible for decoding its structure. NOVA investigates the life of Rosalind Franklin and her unsung contribution to one of science's greatest discoveries. Through eyewitness accounts and the replication and re-enactments of numerous experiments, viewers will see the tragic story of a brilliant young woman and the male-dominated race to find the scientific secret of life.

Pediatrician- tells us about the obesity epidemic. He explains the differences between overweight and obesity, and shows us how to plot our kids' growth on a growth chart. This chart allows parents to compare their children's weight to their height. It also shows how individuals compare to others their age. Psychologist-Looks at the reasons why children decide to lose weight, the benefits and the sacrifices of adjusting their lifestyles to lose weight and how the way they eat influences how much you eat. Dietitian-teaches the importance of planning meals based on the Food Pyramid. However, there are some foods on the pyramid we should eat more of, while eating less of others. Exercise physiologist-looks at the importance of teaching kids to simply move, play and help do chores around the house instead of being couch potatoes. Much of what's involved in getting kids to play is simple. It's simply a matter of awareness.

Dr. Claude Bouchard, the director of the Pennington Biomedical Research Center, tells us how the invention of the wheel, the abundance of food at cheap prices, elevators, escalators, cars, parking lots under buildings all contribute to obesity. We have progressed so much we don't use our muscles and it's literally killing us. We must get back into the routine of doing some things that we can avoid because of progress. Psychologist-tells us how to talk positively to ourselves, talking ourselves out of eating too much. She examines the importance of attention, attitude, accountability and availability from parents. Dietitian-explains the importance of fruits and vegetables in our kids' diets. Not only are they great for keeping our weight under control, they are also loaded with chemicals that help ward off diseases like cancer. Black women have 72 percent of all new HIV cases among women in the United States. Black women are 25 times more likely to be diagnosed with HIV than White women. All women are twice as likely as men to become infected when exposed to the HIV virus. Among Black women between the ages of 25-32, AIDS is the leading cause of death, and girls account for the majority of new HIV infections among teens, especially Black girls. Dr. Mohammad Akhter, Senior Associate Dean for Public and International Health at Howard University, discusses this issue.

There's no question teens are overweight and don't get enough exercise. In this program, teen reporters point out the current and future dangers of an unhealthy lifestyle, such as heart disease, cancer and type 2 diabetes. To help viewers make smart choices, they give easy to use information about reading labels to check the fat and sugar in food; ways to exercise at home; how to change family habits; and much more. They also visit a school that makes nutrition and fitness part of the curriculum; and a Boys & Girls Club where middle school teens learn nutrition basics and fun activities. Through humor, surprising facts and compelling personal stories, teens and parents see how they can also gain more energy and self-esteem through a healthy lifestyle.

Length: 60
Format: Documentary

The next global human flu epidemic may begin with a sick duck in Vietnam's Mekong River Delta, now the epicenter of the current outbreak of the deadly H5N1 avian influenza virus. The World Health Organization estimates that in a worst-case scenario a global epidemic of bird flu might claim between 50 and 100 million lives. Wide Angle travels to Vietnam to portray the nation's response to outbreaks in its cities and provinces, following doctors, epidemiologists, and veterinarians as they battle the evolving virus both in laboratories and in peasant villages that traditionally raise chickens, ducks and pigs. As the government tries to halt the virus and educate its people to reduce the risk of infection, the slaughter of millions of chickens and ducks is wreaking havoc with rural farmers who depend on the animals to eke out a living.

With the U.S. government projecting a $426 billion deficit this year, critics are blaming some of the red ink on the Medicare prescription drug benefit, which President Bush signed into law in December 2003. In 2004, when NOW first reported on the story, the original cost of the bill had ballooned from $400 billion to $534 billion. Where does it stand today? NOW looks at what the Medicare law is costing America. A new wave of bombings across London this week has some asking new questions about those detained in the war on terror. NOW takes a look at the latest on the controversy surrounding the government's hard line on the detainees at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. Amnesty International has called the camp "the gulag of our times," and a growing number of critics - including some key conservatives -- say the detention of more than 500 terror suspects there may be doing America more harm than good. One of America's gleaming symbols of freedom and prosperity, Washington, DC is also home to one of the most impoverished and polluted neighborhoods in America. Two years ago, NOW traveled to this neighborhood along the banks of the Anacostia River to report on a non-profit group called the Earth Conservation Corps (ECC) that was transforming the lives of young people while teaching conservation. NOW returns for a poignant look at where those kids are today.

How do you provide an education for children whom society doesn't value? Inderjit Khurana, an Indian schoolteacher who took the train to work, could not help noticing the slum children who spent their days begging from train passengers instead of attending school. Her solution was to bring a school to the train platforms, where she could earn the trust of the children and introduce them to an education. Dina Abdel Wahab had never given much thought to the special needs of disabled children in Egypt until her son Ali was born with Down Syndrome. Well-educated and affluent, she was able to access services for Ali, but she determined that her son, and all pre-school age children in Egypt, deserved a quality introduction to education. She is on her way towards that goal. In Thai villages, girls have become a commodity. Highly valued in the prostitution industry, they become a source of income instead of being a financial burden on their families. Sompop Janktraka, a loving and determined man, has started a school for young girls to give them an education and options for their future.

Teacher Rafe Esquith has a point of view - a very strong one - about educating children of immigrants. Teaching in Los Angeles at one of the nation's largest inner-city grade schools, Hobart Elementary, Esquith leads his class of fifth graders through an uncompromising curriculum of English, mathematics, geography and literature. He inspires them with cross-country trips to learn history firsthand. And at the end of the semester, every student performs in a full-length Shakespeare play: in this case Hamlet, with advice from actors Ian McKellen and Michael York. Despite language barriers and poverty, these "Hobart Shakespeareans" move on to attend outstanding colleges, motivated by a teacher honored with a National Medal of Arts.
